LEMP ON STAND DENIES HE EVER STRUCK WIFE

Most of His Evidence Is Flat Contradiction of Mrs. Lemp's Testimony.

TELLS OF COURTSHIP

Declares He Never Said Disparaging Things of Religion to Their Son.

NO GROSS ALIMONY

If Any Is Granted, Judge Announces It Will Be Annuity.

William J. Lemp, testifying in his own behalf Saturday in his wife's suit for divorce and alimony, denied emphatically almost all the allegations she had made against him. The greater part of his testimony was a flat contradiction of the testimony given by his wife earlier in the week.

He denied that he had ever struck or knocked her down, that he had ever cursed or pointed a revolver at her or threatened her; he denied that he had ever told his son that there was no God or that he had ever spoken to the child in a disparaging way about the Catholic Church or religion.

The only one of her allegations he did admit was that he had engaged a detective to watch her and he explained that he did this after he had accidentally found the "Dear Little Pal" letter in her desk.

Lemp began Saturday his testimony in his own behalf.

His first told of the founding of the Lemp brewery business by his grandfather.

Lemp said he had been actively engaged in the brewery business for 12 years. He said he was married Oct. 31, 1895. His bride was about 20 years old. He had become engaged the preceding June.

"Had you any agreement relating to the bringing up of children of that marriage?" he was asked.

"I did."

He was shown the ante-nuptial agreement already introduced in evidence and testified that he was present when Miss Hamilton signed it.

Says Wife Read Paper.

Lemp said, in answer to questions: "Quietly prior to the marriage Miss Hamilton agreed to sign a paper and I brought her over to my mother's residence and when she arrived I called her into the room and she read the paper and then signed it in the presence of G. C. Predel and my brother, Paul Lemp, who is now dead.

"Did you swear to this paper in an attempt to contract with Miss Hamilton?" he was asked.

"No, sir; I did not."

"Had you any motive to conceal its contents from Miss Hamilton?"

"I did not."

A Good Witness.

Mr. Lemp said his lawyers call "a good witness." He was not in the best spirited, nervous or excited. He answered questions in a calm, even, deliberate manner.

He declared positively that he did not present to Miss Hamilton any paper in which she was to be free to train the children religiously after they were 5 years of age. He said there was no such agreement, and no such agreement had been talked of between them. The only agreement he ever saw was the contract in the paper in evidence.

This was a flat contradiction of the testimony of his wife in connection with that matter.

Lemp was called to tell his version of his quarrel with his wife in the bathroom in which she had testified that he knocked her down three times.

He answered in the negative.

"I had returned to my home from my office a little before six and I went home at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Lemp was in her dressing room. I pulled off my coat and vest and lay down.

"An argument started. She alluded to my mother and brother and sister, stating that I was simply their tool and that they were 'using' me. I told her to keep quiet. I did not want to hear that line of talk.

"I went out, and followed me with a paper in her hand. I thought she intended to strike me. I pushed her into her dressing room. She ran past me to the telephone. I went out and in passing her I told her if anyone wanted me

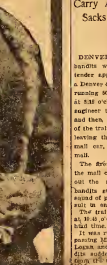
BANKER'S DAUGHTER WHO ADMITS $50,000 THEFTS, AND HER UNCLE



FRANCISCO SCHIAVONE. ANGELINA SCHIAVONE.

GIRL WHO STOLE $50,000 KEPT A DIARY OF THEFT

Banker's Daughter Kept Little Book Under Her Pillow at Night.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—The remarkable confession of Angelina Schiavone, 18 years old, who robbed her father's bank of about $50,000 and gave the money to her relatives, because she made they promised to provide her with a husband, today was made public in part by the police. The girl, confessed to stealing $50,000 and admits that she does not know how much more she stole.

She recorded each theft in a little account book which she carried in the bosom of her dress and kept under her pillow at night, hoping day by day for the thing that she thought have the husband.

A cripple and deformed, she believed, to a single life, which her people looked upon almost as a disgrace, she hoped with eagerness the proposal of her aunt, Giovanna Schiavone, that she should be married to her cousin, Michael Schiavone, who also is a cripple.

Her Confession.

"My aunt told me: 'You are a cripple and no one will marry you,' the confession read.

"She said so: 'Your parents hate you and don't do enough for you. If you do as we say you shall marry your cousin Michael. He is a cripple and you are a cripple and you will be happy. We will enable you to buy a house and live in fine style.

"'Cover and over again she told me: 'Your parents hate you.'"

Some of the questions and answers embodied in the confession follow:

Q. Who told you to steal?

A. My aunt. She and my uncle promised me that after I had married my cousin Michael they would give me the property on Taylor street and some more property on Langua street.

Q. When were the largest amounts you ever took?

A. Three hundred or four hundred dollars. I used to take it three or four times a week.

OWED LANDLORD $6, KILLS HIM

Spat at in Presence of Two Children.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Feb. 13.—Grace Rivers died today from shotgun wounds inflicted by Henry Ballard, a tenant, because she refused to clean Ballard owed $6 rent, but refused to move, and when Mrs. Ballard, the wife of the tenant, tried to evict the tenant, Fred Ballard surrendered to the police.

BANKER'S DAUGHTER WHO ADMITS $50,000 THEFTS, AND HER UNCLE

WIFE, ALLOWED 15 CENTS A DAY, GETS A DIVORCE

Also Sues "the Other Woman" for $10,000, Alleging Alienation.

Mrs. Lillian Lawton, who is suing Mrs. Enid Clifton Gillispie for $10,000 damages for the alleged alienation of Omega-Lambda's affections, got a divorce from Charles Lawton, after she had told Judge McElhinney how she entered Mrs. Gillispie's home in Greenwood and found her husband and Mrs. Gillispie there.

Mrs. Lawton said she filed some time after the alienation suit, but was tried first, as it was not contested. The decree was granted by default. Mrs. Lawton lives with her mother at Home Hatchery on the St. Charles rock road.

Mrs. Lawton, testifying, told of her separation from her husband last July, after 15 years of married life, and said he admitted to her that he had made frequent visits to the home of Mrs. Gillispie in Greenwood.

Known as Her Brother.

She said Lawton told her he was known to Mrs. Gillispie's Greenwood neighbors as her brother.

She also told how, investigating detectives, she had found that the wife of Mrs. Gillispie's mother, made in 1905, before the daughter's marriage, provided that she should forfeit her share in the estate if she should ever marry George Lawton. He had at that time been married for two years. The mother has since died, and Mrs. Gillispie has inherited the property which is now her home.

Mr. Lawton did not mention Mrs. Gillispie's husband, but said it ever appeared in any of her litigation and he had written a letter to Mrs. Gillispie's home. Stipulations showed her the letter, and she walked outside and said she her husband existing.

She Watched the House.

She testified that her husband, and saw women there when she supposed to be Mrs. Gillispie. She said Lawton died June 1, 1908, and married Mrs. Gillispie on July 1, 1908, and has given her no money since, but their mutual estate is in dispute between the separation.

Nothing was said about the alienation hearing. Mrs. Lawton and a neighbor, a character witness, were the only witnesses.

TRAIN ROBBERS FORCE CREW TO LOOT MAIL CAR

Masked Pair Hold Up Fast Denver & Rio Grande Passenger.

ESCAPE ON HORSEBACK

Carry Away Registered Mail Sacks Believed to Contain Large Sums.

DENVER, Colo., Feb. 13.—Two masked bandits who had been hidden in the tender appeared at the engine cab of a Denver & Rio Grande passenger train, running 40 miles an hour, Denver at 8:30 o'clock this morning, forced the engineer to bring the train to a stop, and then, while one fired along the side of the train to keep the passengers from leaving the cars, the other looted the mail car, obtaining all the registered mail.

The fireman was compelled to enter the mail car with the robber and point out the registered mail sacks. The bandits escaped on horseback with a signal of policemen from Denver in pursuit in an automobile.

The train, No. 4, was due in Denver at 10:45 o'clock last night, but was behind time.

It was running 10 miles an hour after passing Millbury Junction, between Fort Lupton and Denver, when the train suddenly slackened into the high trestle over the Platte River. The engineer, to bring the train to a halt.

Fired at Headlight.

The bandits took the two engineers from the cab and, standing about 50 feet from the locomotive, one of the robbers fired three times at the headlight, hitting it twice, but not cutting, damaging it. They fired a number of shots alongside the coaches to intimidate the passengers and train crew.

The conductor appeared on the scene, one of the bandits fired six times. Three times. He was not wounded.

While their companions held the two robbers, one of whom is described as a young man and the other as small, down to the door of the mail car and compelled the fireman to call out the mail clerks to open the door.

There were two clerks in the car, and they were lined up beside the engineer. While one of the robbers covered the men to help him put three sacks of registered mail into the large mail sack. This he threw out of the car.

The bandits ordered the prisoners a short distance ahead of the train and then compelled them to proceed to Denver at full speed, threatening to shoot if they failed to comply.

The bandits fled in the direction of Fort Lupton, but it is believed they really made their way to Denver.

The train was delayed in Santa Fe Junction, where the news of the holdup was telegraphed to Denver, and when the train arrived here the mail clerks notified the Postoffice Department.

Secret Service Men on Scene.

A half dozen secret service men came west to the scene of the holdup and Chief Carter of the Denver police and of policemen to assist in the search.

The surrounding country is being patrolled by a posse of policemen.

The robbers very and information on the crime is not forthcoming, it is agreed that only registered mail was taken, but they have no idea of the value of it. One of the packages taken was addressed to "Mr. Rockefeller, Denver," from a Salt Lake bank, and the contents is considered to exhausted at from $500 to $900. The local authorities have not been able to ascertain if not know how much there was in this package.

20,000 WILD ELK ARE STARVING

Snow Crust Cuts Off Food Supply of Wyoming Herd.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Feb. 13.—Members of the Legislature today received word that 20,000 wild elk are starving in Jackson Hole.

The deep snow, covered with a hard crust, prevents the elks from getting to food. Stockmen showed her the hay, and also walked outside and saw her husband existing.

She Watched the House.

She testified that her husband, and saw women there when she supposed to be Mrs. Gillispie. She said Lawton died June 1, 1908, and married Mrs. Gillispie on July 1, 1908, and has given her no money since, but their mutual estate is in dispute between the separation.

Nothing was said about the alienation hearing. Mrs. Lawton and a neighbor, a character witness, were the only witnesses.

Sleeping Women Shoots Herself.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Feb. 13.—Mrs. Ballard, a tenant, shot herself in her house last night. Nellie Howard was in the room with a shotgun from her husband. Mrs. Lawton and a neighbor, a character witness, were the only witnesses of her left hand.

GIRL DISGUISED AS BOY WORKED, CHEWED, SMOKED

Discovery of Sex Made When She Prepared to Jump From Train Backwards.

CAME FROM NEW YORK

Adopted Man's Attire to 'Bum' Way and Retained It After Arrival.

Mabel Davis has been a boy for a year. She has worn the clothes of a boy and has worn her hair short like a boy. She has learned to smoke cigarettes and chew tobacco. She talks like a boy and walks like a boy. But she does not know how to jump off of a moving train.

She refused to jump off of a train that was moving Saturday and suspicion was aroused which was later confirmed by her confession that she is a girl.

Mabel had been working, under the name of James Davis, at Hell's boarding house at Hugo, III. For several days reports of male women appear have been disappearing from the rooms of boarders. Some of the articles were found in a locker used by Davis. Mabel said Joe Brown requested that the articles be placed in the locker. Brown and Davis were arrested by Marshal W. G. Harper.

Jumping Jump From Train.

Saturday morning Hooper and a deputy took them to Saint St. Louis on a Cotton Belt train. It slowed up at the Baker Street crossing. The deputy and Brown jumped off. Davis got into position to jump off backwards, the way women get off street cars, but was afraid to jump. The train was moving a block further and Davis stopped off. Then she discovered her suspicions, but he said nothing. The two were locked up. When the detectives were handed over all the prisoners Detective Florence Worthed conducting the search of the journey young ship that made the more suspicious than Hooper had been. He took a second look. "That's a pretty boy," he said. Davis admitted that he was she.

A little later she told her story to a Post-Dispatch reporter. She said: "I (Mabel Davis) 18 years old. I was born and raised near Waverly, N. Y. My parents are dead. I was brought up by an old couple on a farm.

Traveling With Hobos.

"I had to give out do all kinds of work and I grew tired of it. I got to I generally there boy's clothes on the farm and I liked them very much. The women died last February. The man had died some time before. I was left an orphan. The only relative I knew of was an uncle in Saint Louis. He lived, I had been told, in Franklin avenue.

"I had no money to pay my way to St. Louis. I thought I would be a boy because I could better from my way. I got to St. Louis with a hobo. I rode on the way I fell in with hobos and learned to chew tobacco. I have smoked ever since.

"I got out and my uncle. I got a job with the Missouri Wrecking Co. I was working there for a month. One day I worked with chewed tobacco. I had a cold. Every time I spoke my disguise I if chewed. One day when I was working I had to climb around a building on the lever I took a chew. I made me sick and I had to lay down on and kept at work. I have chewed never ever chew tobacco much. I don't like the stuff.

Nobody Suspected Her.

"I was let out in October because there was no more work for me and I went to an employment agency. They sent me to Hugo. I could look and work girlies. Could. I told them I could work in a boarding house in Hugo. It was a group for the there. Nobody suspected that I was a girl.

"Mabel says she has never had a sweetheart. I never thought of a particular class of boys the men with whom I lived worked.

She denies emphatically that she stole any other from the room of the boarders at Hell's boarding house.

WOMAN SENDS DAUGHTER FROM HOME, KILLS SELF

Mrs. Christine Wehnert Puts Bullet in Right Temple After Threat.

Mrs. Christine Wehnert, aged 38, shot herself in the right temple at her home, 3131 South Spring avenue, at 4 o'clock Saturday. She was the wife of Ernest Wehnert.

Mrs. Wehnert has two daughters, one a stenographer and the other a child of 11. She sent the little girl to a grocery store at 4 o. m. When the child returned 10 minutes later she found her mother lying dead on the floor, with the revolver in her hand.

She threatened to kill herself before her other daughter started to work, but members of the family did not believe the secret to carry out. Before leaving herself Mrs. Wehnert requested the rug from the room, so that it would not be soiled with blood.

Mrs. Wehnert has been sick, two of whom live in St. Louis and one in Poplar Bluff, Mo.

NEGRO LYNCHED AFTER WOMAN IDENTIFIES HIM

He Committed Crime for Which Another Suspect Was Nearly Burned by Mob.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JAKELAND, Fla., Feb. 13.—Jerdie Wells, positively identified by Miss Irma Newell as the negro who attacked her in her home in school Tuesday morning, was at about sunrise this morning lynched by a party of about twenty-five men. Before Wells was executed the mob cut down the body, and putting it up against a stump, literally riddled it with bullets.

Lynchers the crime the citizens of Lakeland with the country surrounding have been in a state of frenzied excitement, and every man of the several who have been arrested as a suspect has been in imaginary danger of being lynched before his guilt or innocence could be established.

In one instance Dave Crumpler, who Miss Newell said bears some resemblance to the guilty man, though she expressed a belief that he is innocent, was taken from jail and searched by a mob of 100 men and jury to the scene and was saved from lynchings only by the fact that Dave or the search and about to be supplied the grandfather of the young women raised forward and declared his positive conviction that the members being about to kill an innocent man.

Wells, who had been missing since the day of the crime, was arrested at Maysville, about 30 miles north of here, and the deputy sheriff was taking him to jail at Bartow, the county seat, when at about 1 o'clock this morning the train was boarded a few miles from here by a party of about twenty-five men who forced the deputy to surrender his prisoner.

The negro was taken from the train when Lakeland was reached and was marched out to Miss Newell's home. As soon as she saw him she exclaimed "There is the man". The negro made no confession or denial. The mob took him in the woods about half a mile and lynched him.

HOUSE COMES TO KNOX'S AID

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The bill defending the liberty of the secretary of state, so as to authorize Mr. Knox to assume that position in the Taft Cabinet, was recommended for passage today by the House Committee on the Election of the President, Vice President and Members of Congress.

A similar measure has passed the Senate.

ONE EMPLOYE KILLED

Panic Ensued as Soon as the Fire Was Discovered in the Building.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 13.—Five companies of firemen who were fighting a fire in the H. W. Johns-Manville Co.'s plant from the roof of the Nelson Building fell into a lower floor when the roof collapsed shortly after noon today. Five of the firemen are dead. Several are still missing.

The dead firemen are:

Eugene Herbert.

John Kraft.

Leonard S. Curtis.

Assistant Chief James C. Gunning.

Capt. Matt S. Hurley.

The names of the injured are:

Charles Fitzsimmons, mine.

Jack McGee, repair man; skull fractured; will die.

Otto Nimmer, driver; back broken; will die.

Joseph J. Trutin, pipe man, face and neck burned, scalp wounds.

Paul Lemphere, burned and other injuries.

Michael Keogh.

J. J. Crowley.

D. A. Bolster and Michael Tache.

The Johns-Manville Co.'s warehouse and the Chatsworth store. The concern manufactures pipe and boiler covering. Its loss is estimated at $200,000.

The fire started in the northeast corner of the building on the first floor, it is said, from an explosion of oil.

A panic ensued on the second floor which resulted in the fatal burning of an employe. All the other employes are said to have escaped.

The plant is a five-story brick structure.

The stock of the plant of the Charles F. Nelson Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of piano and organ, situated near the Johns-Manville building, was badly damaged, the loss being estimated at $10,000.

The Johns-Manville building is completely gutted and the Nelson plant was saved only by a badly damaged state. Fire underwriters estimate the loss at at least $100,000.

ROOSEVELT REFUSES TO ALLOW TRAIN TO MAKE UP LOST TIME

Reaches Washington Two Hours Late with Gift Demijohn of 30-Year-Old Whisky.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—President Roosevelt and party arrived here at 2 p. m. from Hodgenville, Ky. The President was two hours late. The President arrived immediately to the White House.

Yesterday's difficulty in getting over the wagon road between Hodgenville and the Lincoln farm caused a delay not counted upon, but the railroad officials were prepared, nevertheless, to bring the presidential train back on the schedule. To do so would have required some rapid running.

The President, however, advised against this.

The President brought with him to Washington the usual number of presents. One of the presents was one of them being a demijohn of 30-year-old whisky presented to him by Dr. Coleman of Louisville and the other a hickory-bark bucket, made from the wood of the tree planted and presented by the pensioners of Kentucky.

"DETECTIVE" IS HELD ON CHARGE OF EXTORTION

Edward J. Kennedy Accused of Agreeing to Accept $100 From Druggist.

SIGNED AN AGREEMENT

Negotiations Took Place in Lawyer's Office in Presence of Witnesses.

Edward J. Kennedy, a private detective wearing a star of the "Merchants' Secret Service," was arrested in a lawyer's office after Chief Detective McKenna, concealed in a closet, had heard the negotiations by which he proposed to get $100 from Lee Patterson, a drug clerk.

Kennedy was held Saturday in the Central District Holdover, while the police hold as evidence an agreement which, it is charged, he signed in the law office of Walker M. Barnes. Patterson's brother-in-law, who drew it up with the assistance of Deputies Vincent McBrine and Clifton Goodwin.

Patterson told city detectives that Kennedy recently told him he had been employed by Patterson's partner, who wants to Bowen, to investigate the affairs of the drug store, and, Patterson related, that he had evidence to show irregularities on Patterson's part in the handling of the firm's funds and offered to suppress this information for $100. When he said he intended to go to jail, he said.

Patterson said then he had been no such irregularities, and that the day detectives what he should do. He was advised to set a trap for the private detective, and this he did with the aid of Barnes and of McBrine and Goodwin, whose office in the Fullerton Building is shared by Barnes.

The paper which, it is charged, Kennedy signed in Barnes' office, after it had been read in the hearing of the city detectives, was dated Jan. 7.

"Whereas, I am in possession of certain evidence and information that will convict one Lee Patterson of stealing money from the Patterson Brown Drug Co., and whereas, I am about to publish and give up my evidence, this said Lee Patterson to be prosecuted and arrested, and, "Whereas, I am desirous of living in California, unless Hold Leo Patterson or W. M. Barnes, from publishing this, I hereby the sum of $100, to forever divulging and publishing the same and turning over the same to the proper authorities and the Patterson Brown Drug Company. I will publish said information and make him all the trouble possible.

"In consideration of the payment to me of the above amount, and permitting me to go to the said State of California, I hereby agree to destroy said evidence and information, and forever keep the same from being published and made known to any person whatsoever.

"Received $100 on account of above mentioned contract.

"EDWARD J. KENNEDY."

The agreement took place at 4 p. m. Friday in the office of Barnes, already referred to make a statement. He gave his address as 3634 Olive street.

The Patterson-Brown Drug Co. is at 4100 Forest avenue. Brown was asked to call at police headquarters Saturday to state whether he had employed a detective to shadow his partner.

NEGRO WITH BIBLE AND KNIFE KILLED AFTER ATTACKING CROWD

Knocks Women Down on Street, Is Shot to Death With Small Rifle.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

MIDLOTHIAN, Tenn., Feb. 13.—Carrying a Bible under his arm and brandishing a long knife, Henry Tate, a negro, 45 years old, attacked two white men and women at the corner of Poplar avenue and Main street in the business and residence district, this morning.

Shouting "I'm a-goin' to the murderer," the negro slashed George Lewis, a young man who was with his sister, knocked down several men and women and ran toward Jeff Davis avenue. He continued as soon as weapons could be procured, and when he came to the end of his run he killed by a young man with a bullet from a small rifle.

ELBERT HUBBARD LECTURES TO INTERESTED GATHERING

"Elbert Hubbard, editor of the Fullerton, delivered a lecture on "The Merch of the Centuries" to an audience that packed Schmoll's Opera House in Jennings Friday night. He handled his theme in the individual style for which he is famous, commenting on the past events and the big figures of the Fullerton.

Later in the evening Mr. Hubbard was entertained at St. Louis Club by Saunders Morrell, a number of congenial Fullertonians. Hubbard was the boyhood experiment with Texas cowboys and expatiated on the trick of rolling a cigarette with one hand which he employs so successfully on the Sheriff in "The Round-Up."

Mr. Morrell's guests were Elbert Hubbard, Sheldon Albright, George A. Johns, Frederick W. Lehmann, Hugh Henry Hite, Harry H. Hite, William Marion Reedy, Charles A. Silz, J. C. Strauss, Bailey B. Burton, Frank P. Blair, Frederick Neves Haven, Conn., and A. G. Gladding of Indianapolis.

BODY OF SIXTEEN FATHER; MOTHER IS 17 YEARS OLD

Nine-Pound Boy Blesses Two-Room Home of Mr. and Mrs. Benny Burke.

MAKES HIS OWN JUNK

Youthful Pater Familias Earns $1.50 a Day and Doesn't Fear Future.

Benny Burke, the youngest father in St. Louis, is very proud of the nine, healthy nine-pound boy that came to his home, 4000 Gravois avenue, five days ago.

Benny is only a boy himself, having just passed his sixteenth birthday, and the girl who said yesterday he could "have a pair of children, with their baby" is a year too.

Benny works in a junk yard not far from his home, which is a small two-story and two-room house in the yard in which his father and mother live, and Benny is the proud provider for his small and independent family. He sets along well, he says, and is perfectly capable of supporting it comfortably.

"I have earned my own living since I was 9 years old," he said in a reply to a question. "I earn $1.50 a day, and I can do a much heavier work, and we have enough to eat and then some. Have I any money? Sure I have plenty. I haven't had time to think of it yet."

Does Not Fear the Future.

"Of course We startled. I'm pretty young to raise a family, but my wife and I thought it would be fine. We saved the money. My wife and I wanted to get married and we did. We knew that we was able to make a living for us, and we was happy. We didn't know there are a lot of kids of my age getting married, and they don't seem think my wife kind I ought to be there, too, but I never had the chance to go to school much, and I think I'm a good deal bigger than most of the boys in the home of my own and my wife and I know how to take care of ourselves and know."

Burke is small and compactly built, with a round, good-looking face, and bright, brown eyes. He looks like a clean, intelligent school boy, and his manner is that of a man who is proud of his job. He name was Andrew Clancy Burke, and he was named after an Irish Clayton last summer and to be married.

When the news was first broken the rock on her door, as she testified he said:

ADMIRAL EVANS AND ST. LOUISAN SWAP WAR TALES

"Fighting Bob," in St. Louis to Lecture, Meets Old Comrade of '65.

HOT FIGHT RECALLED

Delmar Avenue Plumber One of Eight Men Who Escaped Awful Carnage.

Rear Admiral Robert D. Evans—"Fighting Bob"—who is in St. Louis to deliver a lecture at the Odeon Saturday night, met an old Confederate Monday at one of the eight men who passed unscathed through the desperate battle in front of Fort Fisher, N. C., Dec. 25, 1864, which is described by the grizzly ex-fighter as the hottest engagement in which he ever participated.

The comrade was James H. Crowley, a plumber, of 4208 Delmar boulevard. He called in at Admiral Evans' at the hotel, and the two men, naked intimately of the conflict in which "Fighting Bob" was wounded four times. Although Admiral Evans had not seen Crowley from the day after the battle until Saturday he recognized Mr. Crowley.

"I'm glad to see you, Crowley," he said. "I've often remember that shell that exploded right under you on the Pembroke, just before the battle and threw water all over you! I remember how we all stopped for a moment to see who was killed.

"Firing shaking hands with other officers, Admiral Evans continued: "That was a great day!

"Do you remember, Admiral," said Crowley, "when you fell wounded on the bench?"

Jumped Three Feet in Air.

"Yes, I do," answered Fighting Bob. "When I was hit I jumped three feet in the air. It was enough to make a fellow jump."

"Yes, yes," answered Crowley, "when I looked around I saw you up in the air, and I'll tell you why I didn't stop to help you when you were shot, Admiral. You told us all before we left the ship that we had to go right into the fort and take the Confederates by the shoulders and legs and throw them over the ramparts. I knew I would be called down for cowardice if I stopped, so I kept right on."

Then for a few minutes Admiral Evans and Crowley talked of the guns was were on the Pembroke with them. Admiral Evans said that nearly all were dead.

"Do you remember George Pott?" asked Admiral Evans. "He was shot in the groin and killed in that charge."

"Yes, when you called for volunteers to man the boat, I was the first man to step out."

Evans Praises Old Comrade.

"I was wounded in both legs. I heard the chief wrecker of the boughts give orders at night that both my legs were to be cut off in the morning. Well, I didn't sleep any that night, expecting the surgeon to come with that device. When they did come the next morning I shot the revolver and told them I would shoot the first man who understook to cut off my legs.

"I hope you live a thousand years," said the Admiral to Crowley as he arose to go, after having received from the Admiral an autographed photograph.

"And I hope that you are still here when I am gone," said Crowley.

Then Admiral Evans, turning to the reporters, said: "That was the hottest fight I was ever in. I don't see how Crowley ever went through it alive. It was right with me when I was shot. I had 31 men up the hill in that charge and only eight of them came out alive. I was an acting ensign at the time.

Enemy Placed Dirty Trick.

"The enemy played a dirty, low trick on us. They had been making a attack on the other side of the fort, and the navy on the water side. As we were making the charge the enemy fired a phosphorus shell at us, loaded with all sorts of rubbish, and it moved my men down.

"I was grazed across the chest the first time I was hit, but I wasn't hurt. As I started again a sharpshooter on the fort plugged me in the leg. A fellow named Brooks found it up, and I started for the sharpshooter and plugged him in the other leg. I then drew my pistol and killed him—I had to do it, poor fellow!

"One man set me on a cool shovel and tried to drag me off the field. He was shot through the neck. Another fellow was shot through the neck and killed as he was trying to carry me off. I was left lying on the field many hours. I was in a tent in the ship, with the fight going on right over us.

"The day came to at night, and the other sat into my tent. The Admiral would be drowned in that hole, but I managed to crawl out. Twice I was in times, and I was just 19."

Dr. F. N. Webster, assistant of Bassem Post, G. A. R., invited Admiral Evans to meet the old soldiers in their hall at the Odeon Saturday night.

Boys Voices Old Pledge.

"Will call I you club fellow who is bringing up Admiral Evans? Tell him can't go unless he says so, and he's a hard boss.

"The boss—Mr. Crabchank, representative of the Indian Bureau, would have consent to Admiral Evans going to the meeting, and the Admiral said that settled it.

Judge D. P. Dyer, Judge Matthew G. Reynolds and Col. W. D. Daldorfer called for a few moments.

"Admiral," said Judge Reynolds, "I was a midshipman under you, and I'll never forget that time when I was on the deck of the ship and you saw me, and in that shrill voice of yours shouted: 'Get through that lubberly quick and get the lanyard out of your hats!'"

Admiral Evans said he could not see that the Hague peace conference has done any good toward the establishment of universal peace between nations.

Is an Advocate of Peace.

"I am an advocate of peace," he said. "I have seen enough of war. But I am not one any tendency among nations to get away from it. All the nations are getting ready to fight, and it looks to me like there is going to be a scrap before the millennium. Somebody is going to be in for a good hammering, and I don't want it to be the United States.

"The way for the United States to keep down war is to be strong enough to whip everybody else. If we are ready to fight and at the drop of the hat nobody is going to attack us. With battleships and their crews, ready to each ocean, we would be well certed against war."

Admiral Evans, who took the American fleet from the Atlantic to San Francisco on its journey around the world, is now making a lecture tour of the country. He says he finds lecturing very pleasant, and is surprised at the interest the people take in the navy. He will go from here to the Pacific Coast, stopping in Utah, where he enlisted. He will then return to Washington to a business route. Mrs. Evans accompanies the Admiral on his lecture tour.

Newlyweds So Attractive They Almost Make You Wish That You Were Married

Marguerite Martyn Finds Ruby Ray Is Half a Fairy, Even Off the Stage.

By MARGUERITE MARTYN.

NOT long ago a certain eloquent clergyman preached a direful, doleful sermon against newly-married persons who so lose themselves in each other's society as to think they need no social fellowship. Truly very bad to discontent and ungrateful and their community, and of consequence neglecting their obligations to society.

It was a sufficiently unusual line of attack when contrasted to the usual efforts of pastors toward directing attention to those people at the other extreme who consider an obligation exacript to society. And it was a startling sermon when he showed those mistaken couples as unthinned people along with "bosom" never-do-wells, women who have gone from bad to worse and all the other outcasts who are to be excused from society and whom society excuses with pleasure.

It brought consciousness to notice a fact—for who has not had occasion to resent being forced to resign a friend or mortham as hopelessly lost? Not to be assumed as dead, but cheerfully, gladly given up when the only alternative would mean only constant subjection to open exhibitions of offensive—bewildering or monotonous when one is a third party.

THE same subject has been effectively, if not so seriously, treated by George M. Manus in his clever drama, "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," made so familiar by the Post-Dispatch.

When the management of the Garrick Theater urged all newly married persons, and most particularly those who have taken the long step within the last week, to come and witness the antics of the Newlyweds as the sight rule, there was the opportunity for the happy one to see themselves as others see them, to be forced to witness their foolish behavior as seen and depicted and the sermon brought home to them as the pastor was not able to do for he declared that one of their failings is dramatized away from church.

But if there were any cynical bachelors disgusted old maids or selfishness pastors who hoped that some erring newlyweds would be restored to a consciousness of their ridiculous or deadness position, disillusionment was to be theirs.

On the other hand, the Newlyweds and the baby are made so attractive in the play that I am sure everybody goes away wishing they were newlyweds themselves.

Napoleon Newlywed Is Much Improved in Looks.

NAPOLEON is much better looking than his rightful owner is wont to make him appear, and we are allowed to forgive Master Rosen, his personator, for that. And while the Newlyweds are just as foolish as any we have known, they are made the victims of so many evil designs that you find yourself all sympathy for them, when not envying their blissfully innocent state.

Nobody certainly could blame Newlywed himself for being foolish about his wife as played by Ruby Ray. The charming laughing woman is Mrs. Newlywed to each portrayal by of the McManus drawings, and the poorness bodies a shame of her one which is so distinctly to be felt as it is illusion and unbelievable.

In her dance she is a firefly thing of light and life. Even in her dreaming touch off the stage she seemed so antic remote, as something not of this earth exactly. She doesn't even eat like an ordinary person. Nothing more substantial than milk and-fruit has been her diet during her year's stay in America, I was told.

Fairy Ruby Ray Has a Romantic Life History

SHE is an English girl, born in Buenos Ayres, however. Her life history is most romantic. The grandaughter of Dominic Nicholl, A. R. A., she is obviously a young woman of artistic temperament and highly organized emotions.

Her mother, too, who accompanies her, looks as if she might just have stepped out of a Gainsborough or Reynolds, snowy-hatted, lightly bodiced, ruddy-cheeked as she is.

And the three little roles are not the only "hits" in the play, for, marvel what Miss Ray says she likes about it.

"In England," to quote her, "the star system is not encouraged as it is here. Monopolies such as Gaiety all contribute and public to the star of a performance constitute an American fad, I think."

BUT the actresses who attend the performance will not see their selves as others see them.

George McManus is not lately become a newlywed himself. If he had a hand in stirring up results, the chance of vantage of the erstwhile should Newlyweds and their Baby to lately accounted

BURGLAR SEEMS TO HAVE USED AN AEROPLANE

No Other Explanation Made of How He Entered Second-Story Window.

While Kate Marbek, a maid, shook and pounded the bolted door of the house at 3837 Fairmount avenue, a burglar, who, to judge from the premises, must have entered the house from an airship, pocked a suitcase with his plunder and escaped. Miss Kate and her mother, Mrs. Theresa McCoy, the occupants of the house.

When the girl stopped exhausting the door and went to a neighbor's house to report that she had heard some noises, thinking about inside, the burglar left by the back door, carrying plunder valued at seventy-seven dollars.

No one but an aeronaut or a strong and clever acrobat could have accomplished the feat of porch-climbing by which the man entered the house to the McCoy house.

The upper porch, from which he entered a second story window, has no supporting pillars. The nearest supports it extends from the wall, and it is not about a sufficiently strong to withstand to reach toward it. The reach, to performer, who viewed the place Saturday, seemed an almost impossible one, even with the aid of the longest spring that an agile and long-legged man might make from the adjacent porch.

The bricks on the wall are slightly uneven and there is a possibility that a man might have climbed the wall from Vernon Place.

That the ridiculous opening on the porch was the one entered was evident, as it was wide open. The family left it down. Muddy footprints also appeared on the porch.

Once in the house, the burglar proceeded to bolt the outer doors, so that the members of the family would not enter them with their keys. Then he took a seat in Mrs. Theresa McCoy's, and pocked it with apparently Lovering of Massachusetts Assails Rainey of Illinois in House.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Representative Rainey of Illinois is preparing an answer to the speech made yesterday on the floor of the House by Representative Lovering of Massachusetts. In speaking in favor of Representative Rainey's recent remarks regarding the Panama Canal purchase, from the record, Mr. Lovering declared that Rainey's remarks were based upon information obtained from "blackmailers and ex-convicts" in the New York World. He said that the stories had been offered for sale to William Nelson Cromwell, and to the managers of both political parties during the recent campaign.

Mr. Rainey denies these assertions, says he has never received any information from the New York World and that he will flatly answer Lovering and his other critics at the proper time.

Mr. Lovering was interrupted many times during his speech by members who asked questions. When he reported that there were no secrets connected with the Panama Canal deal, Mr. Hitchcock of Nebraska asked why Cromwell refused to answer questions before an Investigating committee. The answer was vague.

Lovering intimated that the "blackmailers and ex-convicts" are known, but he refused to give their names. He said, however, that the grand jurors in New York and Washington had been investigating and that the men were likely to return to the Penitentiary.

Mr. Shonsteford of Missouri asked him how he knew the secrets of the grand jury room, but the question was not answered. Lovering admitted that he was a warm personal friend of Cromwell's and is a member of a corporation that employs Cromwell as attorney.

STENOGRAPHERS' CLUB PLANS FOR 8000 MEMBERS

They Will Be Classified as "Experts," "Competents" and "Novices."

Stenographers will be classified on a new basis—fist blocks and brunettes any longer, but experts, competents and novices—when the new St. Louis Stenotype Club gets organized.

The new organization will be launched at a meeting Saturday night at Self-Culture Hall, 1831 Carr street. Edgar G. Perkins and his wife, formerly of Pittsburg, are the organizers.

They expect to begin with a small membership, and within a few months to bring into the club a majority of the 30 stenographers of the city—the entire male of the number of Mr. Perkins. They expect to increase the thirty membership by personal solicitation and by advertising.

The feature of the new club, as planned by Perkins, will be examination of its members to determine their rank, and classification according to the results of the examinations. These classifications will be used when the employment bureau, which is to be a part of the club's work, is started.

To be classified as expert by the club, a stenographer must be swift and accurate, a practically perfect speller and a first-class typist. The "competents" will be one who can follow dictation, but whose finished product may sometimes need corrections. The "novice" class will be what the name implies.

"We at all not try to regulate wages," said Perkins Saturday. "But we shall have some other features of a labor union, and of a fraternal lodge as well, such as sick and out-of-work benefits, a loan department and social enjoyments."

It is the plan to arrange for classes in dictation, court reporting and real estate and other special lines of work.

RUSSIAN POLICE SEEK GORKY

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 12.—The police have issued a warrant for the arrest of Maxim Gorky, the well-known Russian novelist. In the document Gorky is described as "a dangerous house."

Maxim Gorky is at present in Italy, and recent dispatches have said that he purposed to reside permanently in Italy.

ROBERT T. STURGEON, BANKER, DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Death of Son of Isaac H. Sturgeon Hastened by Accident During Honeymoon.

Robert T. Sturgeon, aged 45, former president of the Merchants-Laclede National Bank, died Saturday at the home of his father, Isaac H. Sturgeon, for many years City Comptroller, died of uremia at the residence, of 5400 Cabanne avenue, Friday night, after a long illness.

A fall during his honeymoon in New Orleans in 1906, resulted in infinitude injuries, which, according to his family, was a contrib factor in the estrangement of Sturgeon and his beautiful young wife, who, before her marriage, was Miss Amy Bogy, a society belle, according to testimony which Sturgeon gave when he obtained a divorce Oct. 20, 1908.

Mrs. Sturgeon did not contest the action, and a decree by default was granted to Sturgeon after one of the shortest trials on record. Mrs. Sturgeon soon married Lieut. Edward Sims, and has since lived in the Philippines.

Sturgeon kept up his fall on the whirlwind round how his wife's love grew cooler, and a decree followed, and how she had repeatedly told him that she was sorry she had married him.

KNOX AND OTHERS.

The Senate bill to repeal the not thereafter the salary of the Secretary of State is approved by Mr. Taft, who has asked the leaders in Senate and House to facilitate its passage. Mr. Knox himself very properly takes no part in the transaction either way. Excellent lawyers agrees it is a legal and proper way to relieve the Senator from the constitutional inhibition.

In all the discussion of this matter no word of criticism or censure aimed at Mr. Knox has been heard. When the increase in the Secretary's salary was voted he had no thought of becoming the head of the State Department. In fact, the possible bearing of the act upon the politic fortunes of senators and representatives was not thought of, much less considered by anybody in or out of Congress. The case is one of those curious and unexpected turns of law which so often occur in the best governmental systems.

The instant it not matter for petting. The Constitution of the United States cannot be treated as if it might be made to yield to the argument of inconvenience whenever a salutary provision in it works hardship to Government or individual. The provision in question was put there to prevent graft in high places or low and make it impossible for legislators to use their power as etch to promote their own private interest. It has served a good purpose in the past and probably will do so in the future.

The penal bill affects only the salary of the Secretary of State. But since the constitutional provision applies to all civil officers, the same question may come up with reference to other senators who may be wanted by President Taft as Cabinet officers.

Thus, Senators Platt, Buckley, Beveridge, Hale, Lodge, Chipp, Warner, Carter, Aldrich, Scott and Clark, besides a few other Republican senators, who are hardly Cabinet possibilities would be unable to accept Cabinet office under the act of March 4, 1911, when the term for which they were elected expires. Yet any of these senators filling the Cabinet with any portfolio but that of the State Department, little similar to this Knox repeal bill (so to call it), would have to be passed.

During the visit of the Isthmian Mr. Taft learned, among other things that the Panama Canal would cost $500,000,000. Before the close of his "first term" he may learn that it will cost more. The most competent engineer in the world cannot be certain within millions what the cost of such a work will be.

GRAND OPERA IN THE COLISEUM.

The announcement by the management of the Coliseum that negotiations are practically completed whereby the Metropolitan and Manhattan opera companies of New York will be heard in that great hall is commendable and pretty action on the Post-Dispatch's editorial suggestion.

On Dec. 11, under the caption "Grand Opera in the Coliseum," the Post-Dispatch urged the Coliseum management to arrange for such engagements as are now announced. Grand Hammerstein has just opened his new Philadelphia opera house, the Manhattan company singing to an audience of 4000 persons, and Mme. Calve, at the concert of the Knights of Columbus Chorus Club, had been heard to signal advantage by an audience of 7000 in our own Coliseum. The Post-Dispatch pointed out the fact that the Coliseum was finally adapted for the presentation of grand opera on a meritorious scale and commended the attention of the Coliseum management the advisability of bringing New York's open singers to St. Louis.

As a means of enabling St. Louisans to enjoy grand opera, presented by great singers with adequate charm and scenic accessories the value of the new Coliseum will be emphasized.

NULLIFYING ANTI-TRUST LAWS.

Rejecting the Hepburn amendment to the Sherman act, the Senate Judiciary Committee adopted the views of Senator Nelson of Minnesota concerning the value of the act in its present form and the danger of conferring the power to determine the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a combination or agreement in restraint of trade. Discussing the provisions of the Hepburn bill, which would place the power to decide whether a combination, railroad or industrial, was good or bad, Senator Nelson said:

"It has come the power of determining, without notice or hearing, whether a contract or combination in general restraint of trade is reasonable or not. A power which, as we have herein shown the courts deny to themselves, is conferred on the mere head of a bureau in one case and on a special body in another case, and by thus making civil and criminal prosecution hinge on the question of reasonableness or unreasonableness it destroys, as we shall have, after show, the provisions of the act as to criminal prosecutions, and renders them nugatory, and opens the door wide to doubt and uncertainty as to civil prosecutions.

"Shall we confer a power upon the mere head of a bureau, that the Parliament of England were unwilling to accord to the King, and which they regarded as a menace to their liberties? To do so would be a most serious departure from the fundamental principles of our Government, and would be violence to what we conceive to be the process of law."

The reasoning applied to the proposed modification of the Sherman statute is conclusive against Gov. Hadley's plan of placing the power to determine whether a monopoly trust or combination shall be punished or exempted from the penalties in the hands of State authorities. It would render monopoly any less against trust and would put an extraordinary and dangerous power in the hands of the State officers.

Monopoly has always been regarded as a menace to the public welfare. The struggle to overthrow the oppressive power of king-made monopolies is a part of the history of the winning of liberty by the English people. It vitalizes the principles embodied in the common law, which have been adopted and reinforced in our statute laws.

If the plan proposed by Gov. Hadley, the initial step to which is the offer of the Standard Oil corporation to submit to a State inquisition, is adopted, we shall have State-controlled monopolies with the power vested in State officers to determine the fate of commercial and industrial combinations. Little imagination is required to foresee the effect on government, politics and business.

ANOTHER MISCONCEPTION.

If Congressman McKinley quoted correctly President Roosevelt told the California congressional delegation that the Japanese "are as good many world 'or' strike so on the back, but would meet us on level ground and on even terms."

"But," he added, "we cannot tell what this new nation (Japan) will do."

The quotent deepens the impression produced by this extract that Mr. Roosevelt distrusts the Japanese and finds the subject perplexing to many beyond his ken.

Assuming the correctness of the quotation this utterance of the President is what is called a "thinking indirection." He lets it be known that he expects the Japanese to be good and faith. Is this a good way to cultivate their friendship? Mr. Roosevelt has done good work in stopping anti-Japanese legislation in California. But if he wishes to allay the irritation of the Japanese he should be considerate when they are a lightless lot who must be watched closely lest they play underhand tricks?

The Texas who lost $6 through a confidence game at the City Hall should consider Mr. Oliver games in their building there has cost St. Louis more much more than $6.

"SOCIETY" PATRONAGE FOR VICE.

When the New York press is charged to be showing "a trend to the inexpressibly filthy," the definition of its tendencies in this phrase does not come from The Times. The New York newspaper protests give occasion for this language, but it comes from Charles Burnham, president of the Society for Suppression of Vice, and his long experience behind the scenes.

When he cites the "inexpressibly pretty" action on the Post-Dispatch's editorial suggestion.

On Dec. 11, under the caption "Grand Opera in the Coliseum," the Post-Dispatch urged the Coliseum management to arrange for such engagements as are now announced. Oscar Hammerstein has just opened his new Philadelphia opera house, the Manhattan company singing to an audience of 4000 persons, and Mme. As a means of enabling St. Louisans to enjoy grand opera, presented by great singers with adequate charm and scenic accessories the value of the new Coliseum will be emphasized.

Would the chauffeur whose "frankness" regarding his speeds has caused his fine to be $10 instead of $25 have been so frank if his recklessness had resulted in the injury or death of a pedestrian?

PREVENTING BLINDNESS.

The commission appointed some time ago to inquire into the condition of the blind in Illinois has projected a report which shows that from 12 to 40 per cent of blindness is due to infection at birth, a condition easily preventible. Dr. Wilder, who prepared the Illinois report, says that out of 1000 cases of blindness, 225 were unavoidable, 450 were possibly avoidable and 325 were certainly avoidable.

The recommendation that an appropriation be made to prevent blindness in wise. If any considerable percentage of the blind could be saved from this terrible affliction the State would gain on the investment. But regardless of pecuniary conditions, humanity prompts the taking of any practical measure to reduce the number of the afflicted.

$200,000,000 OVERLOOKED.

It is almost inconceivable that a St. Louis newspaper should be the third to discover that in extending its operations to fifteen states, should be lost sight of in the business life of the city and that it should be reserved at by local bankers as "a thing of no importance." Yet such is the fact. Further, some of these bankers say it "plays no part in local finance" and has been "ruined" by a peculiar practice. Yet there is no doubt that it is the most important of all institution. The Post-Dispatch has looked into it and knows that it has millions of dollars in its vaults. It has seen and photographed the money. The full details of this remarkable story will be disclosed in the coming Sunday Post-Dispatch.

Here also will be explained for the first time the cause of the mysterious earthquakes that have startled so many of our citizens about the Sunday dinner, toppling vases from the mantelpiece at all hours and exciting nervous souls who fear that they may be engulfed.

The amazing performances of the most remarkable citizen of St. Louis will also be related, showing how, through no mysterious psychic means, but by the exercise of methods made objective familiar to every reader of M. Lecoq he can describe accurately in the minutest detail people whom he has never seen. This is perhaps the only of some of the interesting features that will be in the next Sunday Post-Dispatch.

It is gratifying to know that the lecture administered to the young woman who had pilfered from half a dozen stores the "wieners" since it is the only punishment inflicted.

The utility of the St. Louis Public Utilities Commission will be greatly quickened and strengthened by a State commission having the same general object.

The Wisconsin presidential electors who cast the vote of their State for William H. Taft "for President" ought not to be the first to appear at the pie counter.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Socialist Lectures.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Nothing seems more in place to the time for the citizens of St. Louis to get busy on the politics field if they want a good city government. The present industrial system is the cause of our little being cut under more than we can well bear. While the workers want to a chance to work and make an honest government, we want good government and we want all that belongs to us as citizens of the earth. Socialists, working men, we want you to come to vote the Socialist ticket. There will be Socialist lectures in all parts of the city in the near future. Go and hear them. You will learn more at these lectures than I am able to tell you in a letter.

Other More Sorely Afflicted.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Yesterday I had to be twice in Saturday's issue from the lady who is dead, I wish to say that I, too, am sorely afflicted with dandruff. Yet I am happier than fortunate as you, dear editor, for I am not totally bald. I am young, have a fair chance, but feel very sensitive. I am compelled to earn my own living and that makes it all the harder. Once I was where I think I am looked upon as a freak or some kind of a freak. Sometimes I wish I had a fortune. I have known them to whisper to one another behind me and say to me to my face, "Why I did like laying my head on my arms and saying I have a headache." Yet I am not the only one everywhere I go. I am easily confounded of my misfortune.

Not a Word In Ever Heard.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

"It wouldn't be a bad idea to dig up some of Lincoln's unsung heroes who resent in the hole to keep Sodom and Gomorrah from the sulphur and brimstone of the captain's dinner. Nobody ever heard of anybody who could shovel better coal than Abraham Lincoln."

The above clipping from the Baltimore News, taken from the Sunday Post-Dispatch, suggested the following verse:

We often hear about some man
Who walked into a town
And there met everybody,
Great fortune and renown!
But of the common folk
Of good and worthy mean
Who walked into a town
And, perforce, walked out again,
Not a word
Is ever heard.

THOMAS NOLAN.

Marriage Promises.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The agitation over the word "obey" in the marriage ceremony has made me very sensitive to the wrong in my mind. It is certainly as easy to promise to do a thing as to promise to do something which is included in that form—"to love" and "to honor." No conscious effort, honest endeavor, or promise can compass the simple reason that it cannot be done as a matter of volition. It is a natural impulse, and unless one feels the person who so conditions himself that he will meet them with entire fidelity. One might have every effort to love an unlovable person and fail miserably. Yet he is bound to honor, love and cherish the premium. An object, to be loved and honored, must be lovable and honorable, and cherishable, or it must begin its feeling. Of course the promise to "love" is a meaningless and unnecessary part of it. No sane person would think of shoving anything into a contract, or signing it, which would be merely constitute a form, and are otherwise meaningless.

ANNA WEBSTER.

Pollard's Plan in England.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Judge Pollard's plan as recommended in the English probation act has now had a year's trial and is much interest the people of St. Louis to know the results. Mr. Hobhouse, who gives fully and fairly the government issues a review, for which I am asking Mr. Charles Nagel, of St. Louis, to write a comparison between this. In London, about 68 prisoners were given, the benefit of the act, and of these only 8 were found offenders revert to their original ways. Judge Wilkinson, Kings counsel, stating that "if society did not go the rest would not." This element, the yellow element of "society" in London, was best known to the Judge, as it is in our country. As soon as it has made "a New York success" of a vicious plan, it is put on the road for St. Louis and points West. No city of the country is secure against the direct influences of the press between the yellow and the black, the obscenity idle classes for whose pleasure "orgies of obscenity" are put on the New York stage.

The East St. Louis chief who is to be identified by a city force has one chance of escape. But it is doubtful if he will be willing to resort to such a desperate course as using soap.

LOBBYISTS NOT UNIFORM.

From the Dallas News.

When it comes to the evils of lobbying, there must be a unanimity of opinion amongst all those who have seen the outrageous debauchery of it. It is often a matter of curiosity that strange bedfellows appear. Some of the most scandalous games that have ever been played have been played by lobbyists with honorable or money behind them. While this is true, all lobbyist is not scandalous, or even wrong, may more than all legislation is wrong because some of it is altogether vicious.

BEEN GYPSYING.

From the New York Herald.

Least dangerous who says that Sodom is not far from New York has evidently been around more than most of us.

WHAT THE UNIONS HAVE DONE.

J. C. Fagan, in the Atlantic.

An engineer, or any other employee, makes his home at if society in the morning, and spends eight hours in work, eight hours in sleep, and eight hours in recreation. This service he receives from 40 to 60 cents, according to circumstances. Bless engineers well, eight hours and receive more money, but anyway you look at the labor of the wages, the conditions have little to be desired.

Suppose a short distance of my signal tower there is a sweating at grade. The men are working ten hours a day for lower work. As a matter of fact, sweating is a very reprehensible practice.

For years there been, and thousands to have been, sacrificed to the cause, waiting for the consciousness of somebody, or anybody, to stamp it out. Sometimes the unfortunate victims are unorganized and unable to organize, and there is no sentiment to be aroused in their behalf for anybody.

Back in one of numerous object lessons which the employes has constantly before him, and unconsciously he has to be performed for constituting that nature, no sacrifice is ever felt only wrought relief.

TRIAL MARRIAGES.

From the Washington (D. C.) Post.

The "trial marriage" is an attempt, that, because it defies every law upon which society, business or such, and the recognition of human rights are found, cannot, in the nature of things, be adjudged upon the eternal verdict of time. It is abnormal, because it is not the standard of selfishness in the human heart and mind, and because it is one law but that of self—in the constitution of mankind.

HAIR TRUNKS IN CITIES.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

It is the same story in all the big cities. Offices of the associated civic bodies of Cincinnati report that 30 per cent of the mail addressed to them by friends there in December than was given in the month last year, and many liberal giving to asked that the work of the children in distress may be properly carried through.

AUTOS FOR ARMIES.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph.

We take it that the automobile is an important accessory to the military equipment at any military post, and that so long it is not merely purchased, but the evidence of a discussion by their chiefs or members with lower ranks that it is all over. The better monkeys have become prouder than peacocks, and hanging around by their tails or running around with poor trash is objectionable dignity. In the word, they have superseded grunts, and they are respectable and intelligent. You don't hear them chattering around any more like a lot of parrots. Not much. They are reading comics and raising their families, and they don't talk any more unless they have something to say. That is all, my friends. (Bowing.) I thank you. (Great applause.)

Toastmaster: Now, before we hear from the Old Monkey, who knows Darwin personally, we will have another musical selection.

Phonograph song (Darwin's Dream. (Applause.)

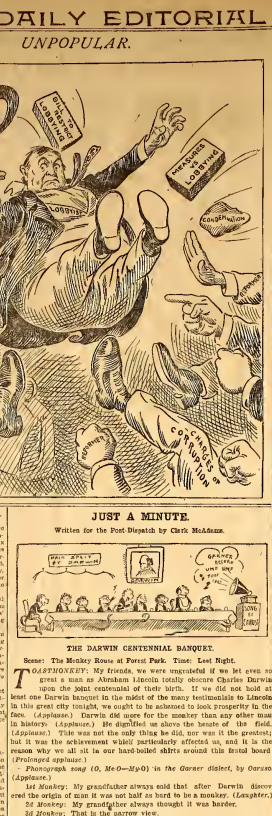
Darwin: Isn't it rather singular that in about as many words as there are in the last 50 years we have elected to the presidency a duck hunter, a bear hunter and a peanut hunter? (Laughter.)

Clemens: O, I don't know! I think the job hunters have had even longer runs in the White House.

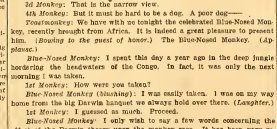
When Time gives us a colonist of Lincoln to run against what we all feel is inadequate to the occasion, it will be time to run against what we feel is the Gettysburg address, patently will be a composite of his birthplace and talk at great length.

Mr. Taft thinks now that the Panama Canal is going to cost half a billion. Everything concerning the Taft administration is going to be big.



JUST A MINUTE

Written for the Post-Dispatch by Clark McAdams.



THE DARWIN CENTENNIAL BANQUET.

Scene: The Monkey House at Forest Park. Time: Last Night.

TOASTMONKEY: My friends, we were unpeaceful if we let even so great a man as Abraham Lincoln totally obscure Charles Darwin upon the joint centennial of their birth. If we did not hold at least one Darwin banquet in the midst of the many testimonials to Lincoln in this great city tonight, we ought to be ashamed to look our ancestors in the face. (Applause.) Darwin did more for the monkey than any other man in history. (Applause.) He dignified us above the beasts of the field. (Applause.) Tide was not the only thing he did, nor was it the greatest, but it was the achievement which particularly affected us, and it is the reason why we all sit in our hard-bolted shirts around this festal board (Prolonged applause.)

Phonograph song (O, Me-O—My-O) in the Garner dialect, by Darwin. (Applause.)

1st Monkey: My grandfather always said that after Darwin discovered the origin of man it was not half as hard to be a monkey. (Laughter.)

2d Monkey: My grandfather always thought it was harder.

3d Monkey: That is the narrow view.

4th Monkey: But it must be hard to be a dog. A poor dog.

Toastmonkey: We have with us tonight the celebrated Blue-Nosed Monkey, recently brought from Africa. It is indeed a great pleasure to present him. (Bowing to the guest of honor.) The Blue-Nosed Monkey. (Applause.)

Blue-Nosed Monkey: I spent this day a year ago in the deep jungle bordering the headwaters of the Congo. In fact, it was only the next morning I was taken.

1st Monkey: How were you taken?

Blue-Nosed Monkey (blushing): I was easily taken. I was on my way home from the big Darwin banquet we always hold over there. (Laughter.)

1st Monkey: I guessed as much. Proceed.

Blue-Nosed Monkey: I only wish to say a few words concerning the effect of the Darwin theory upon the monkey race. It has been very remarkable in all the country above the Congo. When the monkeys were ignorant of their relation to man they were without either pride or dignity. It was common to see the finest monkeys we had hanging around by their tails or sometimes with lower animals that were beneath them in dignity. That is all over. The better monkeys have become prouder than peacocks, and hanging around by their tails or running around with poor trash is objectionable dignity. In the word, they have superseded grunts, and they are respectable and intelligent. You don't hear them chattering around any more like a lot of parrots. Not much. They are reading comics and raising their families, and they don't talk any more unless they have something to say. That is all, my friends. (Bowing.) I thank you. (Great applause.)

Toastmonkey: Now, before we hear from the Old Monkey, who knows Darwin personally, we will have another musical selection.

Phonograph song (Darwin's Dream. (Applause.)

PRIZE AWARDS FOR LOVE LETTERS

With an Explanation and a Criticism of Men as Lovers Written for the Post-Dispatch

By IVAN WHIN.

T has fallen to my lot to read 728 love letters sent by competitors to the authors to the Post-Dispatch. From these I have selected three which in my mind are most entitled to the prizes offered by this campaign. The examination has been interesting and instructive.

Some of the letters were written a generation ago. They are gems, before the minders of lover's high duty, beautiful sentiments in no sober dust were inexpletive and has not wholly passed out of world's ideal. In fancy we recollection the wonders long for the early returns in times of love, long-hoarded treasures. Copies of letters tell of greatly emotion written could not show the emotion paper to leave their bonds.

Some are remembrance of love that died, letters returned when lovers parted, they passed. Many are testimonies to enjoyed affection which has not been crowned by marriage.

It is a fact, worth remark that the prize winning letters are from women. If it were possible to honestly affirm this scientific, it would do it but search and research did not disclose a single letter from a man, who was entitled to more than honorable mention.

What pitiful readers men are at love letter writing! It is not an overchange, overcomplex fear of the language, promise nah which hampers and cramps them for an unknown ever week sense will trouble than the men whose love letters I have been permitted to review. It is not prudence which makes him fold reflections, cring and affect. It is generally regretful that the time has come to throw cold fat in the fire and have a glorious blaze; but he has no fat for the flame. He begins something the title

"Chicago, Feb. 14, 1906.

"Dearest Little Girls:

"Yours of the 10th inst. received and contents noted. I am having a fine trip first stop at Kansas City. Remember Lewis & Co. and expect to hear Hendricks & Co. today. I am comfortable to beat the band, but all the time I am thinking of you. Dear little girls, I can't say what you are in my to-been, but you know that you are the girl I ever met. You are to me the brightest star in heaven, pure as the sun, fairer sweet and the handsomest girl I ever saw. I feel your eyes the first time I ever saw you and now I sigh and my heart beats for you alone." * * *

No one could think that Bill is not trying to write a love letter; nor can he be charged with lack of sincerity, economic himself irrepressibly. "Dear little girls" would get all the damages he is capable of paying on that letter. As it is remains all means of his sense he gave valiantly on mixing dedications of love, but grammar and good business in a bank of words with the pathos outlining of no economic honest-sayer compounding competition for Friday's dinner out of Monday's money.

There is another type of male lover let. He writes as cold as the business and changes on the sentiment:

"Dear Miss Brandon:

"I hey you will excuse my presumption in writing to you but ever since I seen you last night I can think of nothing else and I hope your feelings toward me are the same. I could not sleep for thinking of your sweet voice and your fine figure and how glad you made me when you accepted my invitation to dance. Do not think I am too rudeby, for I must say that I love you with my whole heart and I will always love you. I will be as good, which I hope will be many years to come yet, I hope yet you be married soon. I make good wages and can keep you fine." * * * *

Very well, he is doing his best and we should not laugh. It is the worst possible taste to laugh at lovers and especially male lovers. Men have the border of morning a lesson on them. In their, enveloping them. They need little and lover pity. Love with their mates all grits have read many love eirdes and they talk of love with their mates. Men hope therein for the explanation. Any woman seems to have the ability to write a love letter if she be in love; it may be she will disregard the rules of orthography and grammar, but she will put on paper the very words that men's hearts.

One of the letters from women lovers halted me in the search for prize winners. Spelling is absent of cloudy written any from the heart. How could he treat her so, neglect to write, came his love

BRITT'S SILK HAT AROUSED BAT'S FIGHTING SPIRIT

Champion Tells of Battle With California Boy for the Lightweight Championship.

BY BATTLING NELSON.

Copyrighted, 1909, by Jeffries-Johnson.

ASIDE of my natural ambition to win the lightweight championship, one of the strongest reasons I had for my victory over Jimmy Britt was because he wore a high hat and a Prince Albert coat. It may sound like a "kick," but, on the level, it made me quite a sore proposition to come well and I made up my mind that some day I would bring him down to the class where he belonged.

In those days it was somewhat of a satisfactory manner for me. My wounded feelings, however, were somewhat healed when the officials handed Manager Murphy a neat package of greenbacks representing Britt.

This was the more money I had received for one fight up to date.

Britt's Vanguard Is Missing.

Before I left for Goldfield I told Manager Murphy, the 40-pound-of-boy manager, as one of the sporting writers, that I would fight Britt, but he was impossible to locate.

I'm to date he had not been prompt in settling, and I was anxious to do business in a businesslike manner. Hearing nothing to find him. When I did search him he made an excuse of broken engagements and promised to meet me on a certain date. I was to be appointed spot, but failed to find Murphy, the vanguard of Britt, because he was missing.

An Eddie Smiley, my former sparring partner, was to depart for Chicago, I learned Murphy goes there which he at the ferry to talk him off. I hurried to the Murphy residence, and Murphy checking their trunks. When I entered Murphy's room I was surprised to informed me that he was merely there for a few minutes. I had a strong suspicion and therefore couldn't even let the boy Britt know I was in town. I dropped into Harry Corbett's for my "Ruby" and I was surprised when the news reached in an envelope—it was from "Ole Nap" Wheeler, of New Orleans, I had the handicapping as being from Wheeler and immediately I felt suspicious.

I opened it and there found a note with a $50 bill inclosed. The letter stated that he had been unable to be on account of sickness in the family and a lot of "bad luck." He gave claim that it was his intention to run off the fight, but he could not, unfortunately get away.

The police chief instantly wired instructions to Stockton, advising the authorities there to arrest Murphy and Britt. Next day Detective T. ylor was sent to Stockton to arrest Murphy and Smiley back to San Francisco, where I was to appear as a witness.

After that Murphy and I moved continuously from place to place.

After Britt Again.

I have always felt that I defeated Corbett a second time. I now felt as if I was entitled to a return match with Britt, so I put out on his trail.

I had boosted Corbett out twice the San Francisco press and the public at large announced of first to show his colors and fight me. He finally agreed to sign a contract for a return and posted a $1000 forfeit with Harry Corbett for a fight to take place some time in July. This was done.

Britt was not interested in the arrt. Ded—one that I was not allowed to enter in my fight with Corbett in my grounds, the other that I meet Britt on San Francisco soil. Inside two July I for signing of final notice.

Britt Finds Me—Stock.

"As I was under the care of Dr. Lucas, a Chicago lecturer of my brain—in, gaiety—one of the men I found it impossible—to fight for a few months. I was ordered immediately to seek out the doctor's advice.

I was for fifty days. Newspaper sport writers had whooshed the story of my illness throughout the country. Letters flowed in, and in a result I was compelled to demand the publication of received letters from the Philadelphia Ledger, Chicago Tribune, Chicago Inter-Ocean, Chicago Examiner

THE POST-DISPATCH'S DAILY RECORD OF MARKETS AND FINANCE

COM. COMMISSION AUTHORIZES THE ERIE BOND ISSUE

Advance in American Stocks in London Aided by This Circumstance.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—The Evening Sun in its financial review today says:

"As frequently arranged when a long holiday falls on Friday the New York Stock Exchange, at the request of its members who visited a three-days' rest from business, remained closed the Saturday, when ordinarily there would have been only a half-day session. The New York Cotton Exchange and the Produce Exchange, as well as the grain department of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, opened this morning for the usual half-day session and the clearing house and all the banking institutions here remained open the usual time today.

"There being no holiday interruptions in London either yesterday or today, American securities in those markets continued to show improvement on the other side, which was started in this city late Wednesday and Thursday.

"The betterment in London was not confined to American issues, but by reason of promised quiet over the Bulgarian dispute, and the cessation of indicative hostilities on our Pacific Coast against the Japanese, there was a marked rise in consols. Prices in London, which before, were somewhat irregular today, with more advance than declines.

"A generally higher tone of prices was established in the dealings in the unlisted week in the stock market. Transactions in stocks have been in somewhat reduced volume, but the dealings in bonds have been maintained upon a comparatively large scale, and what is of greater importance in the first then there is no diminution in the tidy to be detected in the outside investment market.

"There have been few developments during the week calculated to bolster speculative activity in one direction or another. Consequently the business of the commission houses has been on a very small scale and the trading largely of a professional character. For this reason technical reasons circumstances might be referred to as having been mainly responsible for the course of prices.

"If the stock market does have been no evidence of liquidation, and the bon market for stocks indicated the disposal of a considerable short account. It must be said, at the same time, that neither the state of the country's trade nor its condition in a financial sense affords good ground for stockmarket buoyancy, but apparently professional traders and others interested in accounts hold to the view that the market both respects is now fully known and appreciated and that any further change must be for the better.

"As the crisis of last week and in the early part of the present week passed without any disturbance, and brought only bangs in discussion, but apparently the matter has been disposed of for our time, bringing the most recent actions of the legislatures of the two great states, New York and the week Pacific Coast, and unrelated stability in the London stock market, which there are hopes will be dealt in, but into strength was based upon the belief that the worst of the depression of the financial crisis is over.

"After the show of greater strength last week there was a reaction in prices on Saturday. Last Monday's trade showed with its complexity better low in each by the end of the week, and the market was more attractive, of course, the demand centers in such holdings remained entirely from the speculative side, and the market showed its inability to maintain the advance made in the previous week. Thursday's trade showed a decided improvement, and the market showed a good deal of strength, which was based on the belief that the worst of the depression of the financial crisis is over.

"Money was in good demand and discount rates were firmer. Sterling exchange was firmer, and the Bank of England's gold reserve, good-sized claims after early advances,

Railroad Journey Plans Completed for "Trip to Washington" Winners

School Children Will Travel With All Possible Luxury and Comfort.

OVER HISTORIC GROUND

Hotel Headquarters on Pennsylvania Avenue, Where Parade Will Pass.

Arrangements for the railroad journey to Washington and return, for the party of 40 school children who are to see the inauguration of President Taft as guests of the Post-Dispatch, have been completed.

The winners of the contest will go to the national capital on the fast and luxurious Big Four train which leaves Union Station at 8:00 o'clock sharp on Monday, March 1, arriving in Washington at 7:40 p. m. next day.

The party will have four and a half days in Washington, leaving that city for home at 1:40 p. m. Saturday, March 6, and arriving in St. Louis at 8:30 p. m. the next day.

Arriving in Washington, the party will be registered at the National Hotel, which overlooks historic Pennsylvania avenue, where the inauguration parade will pass. The railroad and hotel accommodations will be of the very best, the travelers enjoying the finest Pullman cars and dining car service going and returning.

Traverse Historic Ground.

The railroad trip to Washington and return will itself be one of the most interesting and delightful features of the week. The boys and girls who will compose the party are to be congratulated on the fact that they will pass through many miles of beautiful scenery and see so many spots famed in history, among them some of the greatest battlefields in the United States.

These cities will be strangely thrilled by the dramatic call out stations the travelers have been to the school boy of girl only great names listened in glowing immortality on the pages of their history—Gettysburg, Antietam, Gettysburg, Cumberland, Harper's Ferry, Hagerstown, Chambersburg, Cedar Mountain, Brandy Station, Rappahannock, Manassas and many others.

From the car windows young eyes can look out upon fields once littered with the ghastly debris of war. Plowed fields, peaceful now in the golden glow of the days that precede spring, but once the scenes of terrible struggles that give solemn grandeur to history, will make the heart beat fast to look upon them.

Now and then the rounded, weathered outline of venerable earthworks, grass-grown, but once throbbing and battle-blistered, can be seen from the windows and, long and history is hard, the young people will be able to follow, step by step, as their ride alone as historians, several of the most famous campaigns of the Civil War.

Dull Ruin and Memories.

Dull Ruin and Memories! What thoughts these two names conjure up. At sound of them the mind flies backward to the opening of the war, to the days when the leaders were bowed down with dread of the impending storm, while the young and impetuous on both sides rushed into the conflict with zest and buoyant enthusiasm.

Approaching Manassas the train dashes along by the quiet thread of Bull Run, that little stream which figured so dramatically in the country's history. Just before the town of Manassas begins the train is to a point the passenger can see out of the window a hill covered with pavement, rising amid the green where once men died in battle.

Beyond the town on the way to Washington is another huge work of the same in gray, not a monument erected by the survivors in honor of their dead brethren, but a gigantic earthwork, once equipped with cannon and alive with grub-coated soldiers.

A little later the train passes Fairfax, where the very first fighting of the war, the skirmishing that preceded the first battle of Manassas, or the battle of Bull Run, took place.

Where Sherlock and Grant Won.

Not only the dashing prelude of the great conflict and those that followed are to be traversed, but also the tremendous drama reaches to an end in the very country through which the boys and girls are to journey on their trip to Washington.

Round the Rapidan the army of Grant lay encamped just before it started on its first campaign, bringing up a sad and solemn termination the high hopes that had led the Union forces on many years of heroic sacrifice.

It was there that the young travelers can see the historic country in the rise—just the ridge upon itself for the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Fort Fisher, Sherlock and Appomattox.

The Wilderness is not visible from the train, but it lies only a few miles distant, and one who watches and informs himself may look out into the day dreams and know that just beyond the line of vision stand the gloomy woods with their fateful alcoves, where so many lives went out in awful carnage.

And the Shenandoah Valley! How the name of glorious Sheridan leads the thoughts and one sees him in the saddle, six, ten, twelve, 20 the wind, his sword upwinded, his horse dripping as he shouts "Come on, boys; we're going back."

Stonewall Jackson's Country.

The young travelers will cross that valley—so beautiful, so quiet, so peaceful now—where Stonewall Jackson—the brilliant Jackson—executed many of the most daring coups of his immortal career, making the rich streets of country famous to the footsteps of the "Valley of Humiliation."

It was the great granary of the Confederacy and rich, gallantly won it defended until Sheridan, once and for all, made the gray defenders cast of its confines.

These are just a few of the points of historic interest that will make the railroad ride a thing to be remembered always. It would be difficult to put into words any description of the Blue Ridge, Mountains with the train will climb, Harrisburg and Gettysburg is a veritable fairyland of blue distances and exquisite colors.

The scenery along this route to Washington is said by many artists not to be surpassed in all the world.

Harper's Ferry, after covering in bed scenes beyond description and fanning the mind on great and solemn things of history, Arlington, home of the Lees, and the national cemetery, where so many, many soldiers dead lie in the last sleep, will come into view and beyond will rise the national capital.

Dr. Hendrick's house of the Post-Dispatch there will be more information concerning the things beautiful and historic, that will be taken in on the journey, and some of the young people who will go from St. Louis as guests of the Post-Dispatch.

MORFIT OBJECTS TO SOCIETY LIFE LED BY HIS WIFE

Doctor Alleges She Spent Much of Her Time Attending Functions.

Dr. John C. Morfit of 3118 Washington avenue, former president of the St. Louis Medical Society, whose wife, Mrs. Josephine Morfit, is suing for divorce in El Paso, Tex., where she is a social favorite and connected with one of the wealthiest families of the city, refused Saturday to discuss his wife's suit or his content for the custody of their 7-year-old daughter, Josephine Gregory Morfit.

If Mrs. Morfit will consent to permit her husband to have custody of the child, he would return to St. Louis, he intimates from El Paso state, he will not contest the suit. Attorneys are now attempting to effect a compromise on this basis.

Mrs. Morfit is the daughter of J. H. Mathews, president of the National Bank of Commerce in El Paso, and also president of the T. M. C. A. While attending school in Louisville two years ago she met and married Dr. Morfit.

Married Several Months Ago.

Dr. and Mrs. Morfit have been engaged for several months. Whether Mr. Morfit's divorce petition does not go into detail to the extent of making it a matter of public record, it is stated that the wife's
